RE: L/Cpl. Robert King 26th Bn, Aug. 8, 1918 Villers-Brettonneux Military Cemetery XVI.D.10

To Whom It May Concern,

Introduction

1. During a recent trip to Villers-Brettonneux Military cemetery in France, I noted several headstones of unknown Canadian soldiers with Battalion (Bn) affiliated graves. In particular, I found one headstone located in plot XVI-D-10, which contained the remains of a Lance Corporal of the 26th Bn killed on August 8th, 1918. After consulting both primary and secondary sources, I have a high degree of confidence this soldier can be identified. In order to attempt to identify this soldier, this analysis will be broken down into three parts: First, I will briefly discuss the whereabouts and actions of the 26th Bn, Canadian Expeditionary Force (CEF), in early August 1918. Second, I will provide the names and details of those Lance Corporals of the 26th Bn who perished in 1918. Third, and finally, I will summarize what has been discovered and present my findings.

Part I – Christening the Ground

2. Given the grave location of the unknown Lance Corporal of the 26th Bn buried in Villers-Brettonneux cemetery (see Appendix A), it is necessary to situate the geographic location of the grave and its subsequent relation to the action undertaken by the 26th Bn during the first week of August, 1918 – particularly August 8th.

3. At a macro-level, the summer of 1918 proved to be a relative period of relative optimism for the Allied armies. On one hand, the French Army continued to have success with its counterattacks on the Marne while on the other hand, the German army failed with its operations near Reims. In addition, the United States continued to flood materiel and men into France to bolster the allied effort. As a result, these turns of events permitted the allies to seize the initiative and go from the defensive onto the offensive.¹

4. In order to maintain the momentum, General Foch proposed to Field Marshal Haig three particular, but limited, offensives with the aim of improving French lines of communication. The offensive pertinent to the CEF, and this analysis, was to be launched near Amiens in order to "...remove the threat posed by the Montdidier-Moreuil salient to the Paris-Amiens railway...."²

5. With a high degree of secrecy, and with the exception of a few units required for deception purposes, the bulk of the CEF was quietly moved from its sector in Arras into its staging area just slightly southeast of Villers-Bretonneux. After a short period of training, the 26th Bn, according to its war diary, moved into its allocated position during the evening of August 5th. On August 7th, however, the 26th Bn moved into their assembly trenches in front of Cachy, France and its final disposition noted in their official War Diary.³

6. At 0420hrs on the 8th of August 1918, the offensive known as "the last one hundred days" began for the men of the CEF. By approximately 0600hrs, the men of the 26th Bn were firmly engaged in combat. Notwithstanding the success of the previous brigade as they moved through the sector, several machine gun nests had remained undetected in a wheat field. This was problematic for the 26th Bn as the fog was also lifting during their advance, providing German machine gun crews with an ample supply of targets. Consequently, several companies of the 26th Bn suffered considerable casualties before reaching their first objective – the green line – depicted in Appendix B. By August 11th the 26th Bn is pulled from the trenches and goes into reserve. For its actions between August 8th and August 11th, 1918, the 26th Bn suffered considerable losses – one of whom being the soldier now buried in plot XVI-D-10. Given the date of death for this particular soldier, there is no further requirement to delve deeper into the official histories and it is at this point the historical narrative ends.

Part II – The Lance Corporals of the 26th Battalion lost in 1918

7. To begin the analysis, there was a requirement to determine how many Lance Corporals of the 26th Bn were killed during 1918. Before we do so, however, it is necessary to point out what will not be included – namely, those Lance Corporals of the 26th Bn killed between the arrival of the battalion in France until December 31st, 1917. The logic behind this omission is based on the geographic location of the 26th Bn for those particular years. In short, it means a particular soldier can be eliminated from this analysis because the location of the 26th Bn during those years would not be consistent with the location of the casualty buried in plot XVI-D-10.

8. With the above in mind, a consultation of the 26th Bn's history, New Brunswick's Fighting 26th Battalion, was warranted.⁴ One of the Appendices of this well written history is a roll of honour, which identifies all those members of the 26th Bn lost during the First World War. Combing through this particular section of the book revealed a total of fourteen Lance Corporals who were lost in 1918 (details are contained in Appendix C). They are:

- a. Daniel Harold Keleher – 08/04/18;
- b. James Rasco – 08/04/18;
- c. Robert King – 08/08/18;
- d. Neil Benjamin McLeod – 08/08/18;
- e. Earl Alexander Moore – 08/08/18;
- f. John Addison Orser – 08/08/18;
- g. Thomas Henry Pirie – 08/08/18;
- h. Francis James Cameron – 08/08/18;
- i. Clayton Crowley – 28/08/18;
- j. Charles William Darcus – 28/08/18;
- k. Garth Leland Miller – 28/08/18;
- l. George Frederick Glass – 31/08/18;
- m. Alfred Morris Thorne – 12/11/18; and
- n. Everett Watson MacRae – 22/11/18.

9. Of the casualties noted in the paragraph above, twelve of them can be immediately removed from the analysis as they have known burials. Only two

Lance Corporals of the 26th Bn are listed on the Vimy Memorial with no known grave. They are:

- a. Robert King – 08/08/18; and
- b. Charles William Darcus – 28/08/18

Thus, we will now turn our attention to L/Cpl King and L/Cpl Darcus and focus on their specific circumstances.

Part III – Findings & Conclusions

10. Referring to Appendices D & E respectively, the Commonwealth War Graves Registers, both documents clearly state that both L/Cpl King & L/Cpl Darcus were to be commemorated on the Vimy Memorial. The reason behind this situation was that both were not known to have any grave at the time. An interesting fact is revealed by the Burial Returns report contained in Appendix A, which notes the unknown L/Cpl buried in Villers-Bretonneux cemetery had an approximate burial location, 62D SE V2 D.2.3 (plotted in Appendix B).⁵

11. The Circumstances of Death (CoD) files for both L/Cpl King and L/Cpl Darcus, contained in Appendix F also reveal additional information useful to this particular analysis. In the case of L/Cpl King, two key pieces of information emerge from his CoD file: First, the narrative states that he became a casualty “during an attack from Cachy to Caix, [where] he was hit in the stomach by machine gun bullets and killed instantly.” Second, the date of him becoming a casualty is noted as August 8th, 1918.

12. In a similar vein, the CoD file for L/Cpl Darcus also indicates two important pieces of information: First, the geographic location of where Darcus’ death occurs is noted as an “attack to vicinity of Cherisy-Hendecourt Road.” Second, the date of his death is noted as the 28th of August, 1918.

13. With the information contained in paragraph 11 and 12, we now know for certain that L/Cpl Darcus met his untimely death approximately 58 kilometres north-northeast of where the unknown L/Cpl of the 26th Bn was buried.⁶ Within the First World War context, it is extremely unlikely the unknown soldier buried in plot XVI-D-10 can be L/Cpl Darcus as the distance between the two locations is too far apart both in terms of actual distance and by date.

⁶ Distance is approximate and was generated online using a generic maps application and based on a walking, vice driving, route to simulate the movement of the 26th Bn during August 1918.

13. In the case of L/Cpl King, however, we know for certain he was killed in the same geographic area as the unknown who was originally buried at GR 62D SE V2 D.2.3. The exact location of his death will remain unknown but the Battalion history notes that as the 26th Bn advanced between its jump off point and to its first objective, the Green Line, at "...about 2000 yards southwest of Marcelcave they encountered machinegun nests in a wheat field that had been overlooked in the fog by the 4th Bde troops ahead of them."⁷ While the companies of the 26th overcame these obstacles, they did not do so without taking heavy casualties, which is noted in the Appendices of the 26th Bn's official war diary. As a result, it is highly likely L/Cpl King was one of the initial casualties during the early morning of the 8th of August. See Appendix F for map detail of operations conducted by the 26th Bn during the morning of August 8th, 1918.

14. Therefore, it is with a high degree of certainty based on knowing the whereabouts of other L/Cpl casualties of the 26th Bn for 1918, the date of death, location of the action, and the proximity to the original burial of the unknown, that the remains resting at plot XVI-D-10 are in fact those of L/Cpl King. Furthermore, the compilation of the Roll of Honour contained within "New Brunswick's 'Fighting 26th'" rules out the possibility of any temporary promotions as the Pt II orders would have been consulted to verify both casualties, casualty circumstances, and the recording of substantive promotions.

15. Given the above, I humbly petition the Commonwealth War Graves Commission to review and concur with the facts contained herein and subsequently change the headstone in plot XVI-D-10 of Villers-Bretonneux Military Cemetery to reflect the details of Lance Corporal Robert King, late of the 26th Battalion, New Brunswick Regiment, CEF.

Very Respectfully,

Working on unknown cases can be difficult at the best of times and it is important to acknowledge those persons and organizations that assisted me during the development of this particular case:

1. First and foremost, my wife, Niamh St-Amant, for toting two small children through several First World War cemeteries in less than cooperative weather. In the course of four cemeteries, we scanned approximately 5000+ headstones to locate unknown Canadian soldiers who have the potential of being identified. She is also a saint for humoring me to bury my head in books, the internet, and whatever else I may need to find a fact, tidbit, or morsel to identify an unknown.
2. The Canadian Expeditionary Force Study Group (CEFSG) and its members, particularly Richard Laughton, who conducted the peer review of this document to poke holes in the logic and conclusions of this document to ensure the integrity of the research.
3. For the development of the trench map located in Appendix B, I would like to thank McMaster University for their splendid archive of First World War trench maps, which is online and readily accessible. The trench map, war diary of the 26th Bn, and the battalion history greatly assisted me to understand the ground truth for this particular case.
4. Without the electronic databases of the Library and Archives of Canada (LAC), this particular work would not have been possible. I truly believe that more unknowns will be named in the near future as a result of their primary material being made available online.
5. Like the LAC, the recently digitized data, notably the Grave Registration documents, located in Appendices A & G, made available from the Commonwealth War Graves Commission has been an invaluable tool to cross-reference and to verify research. I cannot thank the CWGC enough for making this material available.
